

Date Submitted: July 31, 2013

Author: James A. Gobes

As a senior actuary working beyond age 65, I think two changes to the Continuing Education Requirements would be appropriate:

1. Actuaries who have attained 65 years of age should be excused from the requirement for three hours of personal development courses, and
2. For retired actuaries continuing to work part-time, the 30 hour continuing education requirement should be reduced pro-rata based on the actuary's hours billed compared to 2000(?) hours that could be considered full-time.