Robert J. Myers

1912–2010

Former President of the American Academy of Actuaries (1971–1972)

Former President of the Society of Actuaries (1971–1972)

Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration (1947–1970)

The American Academy of Actuaries joins the countless friends, colleagues and associates of Robert J. Myers in mourning his passing and celebrating his lifetime of dedicated public service and unparalleled accomplishment.

In an oft-cited quote, former Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York called Bob “a national treasure.”

Statement from Academy President Ken Hohman

The Academy and all who were touched by his work naturally second the Senator’s sentiments. No actuary has done more to advance the profession through the simple act of performing his duties with integrity, impartiality and vision than Bob Myers. He set a standard for the profession to which we all aspire.

Bob gave of himself to his country through a career built upon the application of actuarial principles to public interest issues that affect every American. He gave of himself to his profession through his work with and support of the Academy and other organizations over his long career.

The Robert J. Myers Public Service Award

The Academy was privileged in 1994 to create the Robert J. Myers Public Service Award to honor Bob’s extraordinary record of public service.

Actuaries and all Americans will miss Bob Myers dearly and thank him for a life of purpose and generosity of commitment.
